

The actions of the NAB are an attempt by a private group of individuals to violate our freedom of choice. The same could be said when cable television encroached upon the domain of broadcast tv, and they still survived. If this group and its supporters feel threatened by satellite radio, perhaps it is time for them to try and be innovative, instead of dooming future listeners to their own brand of a constant stream of commercials.